building on common values and interests, enhancing cooperation for the economy, for energy and environment, for democracy and development, for non-proliferation and security and for high technology, space and civilian nuclear energy. Regional and global issues of significance were also discussed. No agreements were signed during the visit.

(b) President Bush conveyed to the Prime Minister that he will work to achieve full civil nuclear energy cooperation with India, adjusting US laws and policies and international regimes, expeditiously considering fuel supplies for Tarapur and considering India's participation in the ITER fusion project and the Generation IV advanced reactors programme. India's candidature for permanent membership of the U.N. Security Council was taken up during the talks. President Bush expressed the view that international institutions are going to have to adapt to reflect India's central and growing role. On India-Pakistan relations, the President declared that it was for the two countries to discuss and resolve their problems.

(c) The impact of the discussions and undestandings on Indo-US relations was positive. The visit has contributed to an enhancement of India's position in the global arena and to a better understanding of the situation in the Indian sub-continent.

(d) President Bush has accepted an invitation from the Prime Minister to visit India in 2006.
